

Ginninderra Catchment Group Corporate Volunteering

Would you like to get a break from the office, a chance to get to know your colleagues better and an opportunity to make a difference to your local environment at the same time? Corporate Volunteering with Landcare might be just the thing for you and your colleagues!

For more than 15 years volunteers from the Ginninderra Catchment Group and member groups have been working to monitor, protect and enhance the natural habitat areas throughout the suburbs of Northern Canberra and the surrounding region. Better habitat and healthy waterways create more enjoyable public open space for all residents, human or 'other'. The way we manage our landscapes and use our natural resources has an impact on the health of our wetland, grassland and woodland areas. Ongoing monitoring of the biodiversity and condition of our Catchment provides valuable information about past, present and future management. GCG actively seeks opportunities to work with key bodies and individuals from government, industry and the community. These partnerships give the community a say in how we manage public open space and a chance to be part of a more sustainable Ginninderra Catchment.

The benefits of Corporate Volunteering are important:

- Carrying out volunteer work together is a great way to socially connect with people from your workplace you may not talk to on a daily basis, and to get a new perspective on people that you do!
- It feels good to get off the office chair and do some physical work – it helps you stay in shape and makes you feel alive!

Opportunities for Corporate Volunteering include participating in Landcare projects such as monitoring the local environment, weeding, planting trees and other small and large projects.
